WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 1 1893.

A LEAP-FROG TABLEAU.-The New York Turn Verein, Bloomingdale, gave a ball Monday night at Terrace Garden, and opened it with an interesting tableau. The devil sat in judgment, with lots of imps playing around, when from one side of the stage entered a "Black Crook" girl dancing a skirt dance, and from the other a man in clerical garb playing leap frog with two green frogs.

Suddenly the clerical man caught sight of the dancing girl, left off his game, and threw up his hands in horror. He did not have time to get over that before the imps had pitched him into the mouth of a pit of fire that was handy by. A woman in crinoline had gone the same way previously.

RODEMACHER'S WHISKERS BURNED.-Emil Rodemacher had been letting his whiskers grow for several weeks, and his fellow employees in Day & Clark's jewelry shop in employees in Day & Chark's Jewelry shop in Newark, N. J., had been watching their development with envy. The whiskers were neither luxurant nor beautiful in color, but Rodemacher prized them highly, and Monday he appeared before Justice Sommers and made a complaint against Frederick Helwig, who sits next to him at the bench. He said that Helwig and others had been guying him about his whiskers for over a week, and that on Saturday morning Helwig conspired to destroy them.

During the day Helwig, he declared, charged a blowpipe with fine filings of celluloid, and suddenly blew it through a gas jet into Rodemacher's face singing his whiskers so that they had to be trimmed to make the opposite sides balance.

Helwig was arrested on Monday by a constable, and Justice Sommers held him in bail for the grand jury.—N. Y. Sua.
